Creative Brief

Kyle Chang
10/27/2026

Project Title: Martin Margiela Website

01 / Project overview

Create an informational, responsive microsite introducing Martin Margiela through his life, fashion work, and later art practice. The site should feel like browsing a carefully edited archive. Visitors should understand his approach to clothing and why the work matters, even if they are unfamiliar with fashion history.

02 / Resources

The main text source will be the Martin Margiela Wikipedia article. The existing content outline will guide the page structure. Collect garment photographs, close-ups of labels and stitching, runway images, and selected artworks from credited museum or exhibition sources. Record the original source and usage information for each image. Image selection is still to be completed.

03 / Audience

The primary audience is students and young adults interested in fashion, art, and design. Some visitors may recognize the Margiela name without knowing the designer. Keep explanations short, define terms such as deconstruction, and make the site easy to browse on a phone. This is an educational student project.

04 / Message

The central idea is that ordinary materials and overlooked details can become something unexpected. Focus on the work and its construction, with anonymity, reuse, and transformation connecting the different parts of the site.

05 / Tone

Quiet, precise, experimental, and slightly mysterious. The writing should be clear and approachable. Images and small garment details should create interest without promotional language or dramatic effects.

06 / Content & navigation

Use the five pages from the outline, in this order: 01 Home / Introduction; 02 Early Life & Career; 03 Fashion & Design; 04 Beyond Fashion; 05 Sources & Image Credits. Keep the same navigation on every page. Pair each number with a readable page name and mark the current page. Add a source link in the footer.

Visual Direction

07 / White space, numbers & stitches

Use white as the main background, near-black text, and light gray for secondary details. Leave generous empty space so the page feels like a gallery or a clothing label. Let the photographs supply any color. Avoid gradients, heavy shadows, and boxed content cards.

Use small monospaced numbers for page navigation, dates, and image captions. The 01-05 navigation is a site index, not a reproduction of the brand's collection codes. A thin circle around the current number can signal location. Keep body copy in a simple sans-serif font such as Arial; try Courier New for numbers and short headings.

Use four short stitch-like marks sparingly around the site title or one featured image. Keep them separate from text and avoid turning them into full borders. On mobile, reduce decorative spacing while keeping the labels and text readable.

Original direction sketch: numbered navigation, a quiet title, and four isolated stitch marks.

08 / Layout, imagery & interaction

Start the home page with a large image of the work and a brief introduction. Use a simple two-column image-and-text layout on wider screens and stack the same content on phones. Keep photographs uncropped when garment construction is important. Add captions identifying the work, date when known, and source. Use subtle underlines or color changes for links; no elaborate animation is needed.

09 / Practical direction & deliverables

Build with basic HTML and CSS, shared styles, and a small number of media queries. The designer should explore image crops, spacing, type scale, and placement of stitch details in desktop and mobile mockups. The developer should preserve reading order, provide image alt text, and keep navigation usable by keyboard. Success means visitors can follow the five-page structure, read comfortably, and connect the visual details to the subject.